The truth is there is some fire in an old coal pit on the Herron estate, in the Thirteenth Ward, on Thirtythird street, between Ridge and Bed ford avenues, but it dosn't blaze, it doesn't roar, and it doesn't spread fearfully fast. It doesn't effect half an acre, much less five hundred acres. The coal has been "worked ont," but fire was communicated to the portions left in as supports, crops were their only dependence for which are gradually smouldering-so gradually as to scarcely make smoke enough to attract attention.
